Vol. XXXIII No. 3 September - 2017

THIS MONTH – September 19, 2017

"Best Tools of the Trade"

Presented by: Dr. Kathryn Marshall

Kathryn Marshall will show us the best in home pedigree software, its ability to synchronize with the major genealogical websites, new apps to aid your research, and DIY archiving tools.

Dr. Marshall was the Director of the Lodi Family History Center for 14 years. Today she serves on the team that maintains the Research Wiki on FamilySearch and is a frequent speaker at genealogical conferences and workshops. With a Ph.D. in Psychology from the University of California at Berkeley, where she taught for many years, Dr. Marshall worked on substance abuse prevention programs funded by National Institutes of Health. As a Senior Research Scientist in Bethesda, Maryland, she evaluated the nation's substance abuse programs for annual Congressional reports, and did a humanitarian service mission with Cambodian refugees. Later, while working with schools on curriculum for gifted students, she began to specialize in the history of California between 1840 and 1865 when asked to prepare interpretive panels for museums, edit books for historians, and write books of her own on the Gold Rush era. Dr. Marshall is a member of the Advisory Board of the California Pioneer Heritage Foundation, which provides living history re-enactors at state parks and preserves historical sites in California. ■

From the July Meeting

"You've Got Your DNA Results, Now What"

Presented by: Pam Miller Reported By: Russ Erickson

A warm, witty discussion on DNA use was limited by a power pole crash outside our meeting place which deleted electricity resulting in a early termination of our meeting.

Ms Miller provided 4 pages of data prior to the meeting, regarding vocabulary about DNA, internet site to compare genetic DNA companies, sites on basics, great blogs, third party apps such as Gedmatch, AncestryDNA helper, Chromosome Mapper, and Genomate.

She suggested obtaining a separate email address for DNA interactions when seeking to exchange genetic information with others, and naming a beneficiary for your DNA (and other genealogy) research findings. One should pursue matches and contacts found. ►

Pam Miller

Each generation shuffles DNA strands and passes down a partial change to the next generation, matching segments of GC-AT.

Centimorgans indicate segments of full, half, or no match. Always download your actual results. Always check My profile on the net, adding your surnames and denoting maternal and paternal lines. If a family tree is linked to the test results, more people are likely to contact you.

Note that if a testing company changes algorithms, some matches could be lost, so keep a record of your matches. Jeff Snaveley's chrome-add on for Ancestry can help.

Phasing and triangulation denote whether maternal or paternal matches are involved. Triangulation involves 3 people matching for a common ancestor. Pam Miller's talk involved Power Point slides of the various DNA company sites with points very hard to follow due to inability to see those point from a distance, so prior knowledge of the DNA sites (Ancestry, Family Tree, 23 and Me, etc.) seems vital. ■

President's Message

By Ted Shapas

Welcome back, everyone – I hope your summer was great! The last time we met as a group was at our July Mini-Seminar on DNA by Pam Miller. That meeting was unusual in that the power went out, the result of an unfortunate and fatal traffic accident a few blocks away. There was a bit of a scramble, but everything turned out OK, thanks to our many resourceful members, and a speaker with a good voice! Pam will likely be back next spring to continue the discussion, and to show us slides we never got a chance to see.

For those of you stuck or stumped on a particular issue involving your family history, I have a suggestion: try posting your question on one of the many online genealogy forums. For one thing, you will get very wide viewing, likely internationally, and with all those eyeballs, someone is bound to have an answer for you. Facebook seems to be a good location to find these forums; last count there were over 11,000 genealogy- and history-related Facebook pages! (For a current list, go to Katherine Willson's website, <https://socialmediagenealogy.com/genealogy-on-facebook-list/>). A nice feature about using Facebook in this way is that it's easy to post photos and documents.

The process is generally pretty simple; the first step is to join one of these groups. Most have a closed membership, so you need to ask to join, and then be approved before you can participate. I think this is mainly to minimize spammers or advertisers, so you will likely be approved within a few days. Approval usually comes with a short set of instructions and rules that members are asked to follow. This helps keep everyone focused on genealogy and away from distractions like politics or cat photos.

Once in, it's good to read the posts for a bit to gain an orientation. After you feel comfortable with the group, compose your question, along with some background on what you've already tried and what you already know, and send it in. If the group is fairly large, I would be surprised if you don't receive an answer almost as quickly as you can say "brickwall"! ■

Is Perfectionism Holding Back Your Genealogy?

Francie Lloyd submitted the following article
taken from the on-line website:

Amy Johnson Crow Newsletter

Have you ever had either of these thoughts:
"I know I should write my genealogy, but I'll do it
when it's all perfect" or "I'll write my genealogy
when it's complete"?

There are two things that might make you reconsider those positions: first, There's no such thing as "perfect" or "complete"
and second, Writing can actually improve your research

As careful as we are, everyone—and I mean everyone—has a mistake somewhere in their research. It could be a wrong ancestor or an incorrect date or place, but there are errors. We're human; it happens.

Complete? Genealogy is never "complete."
When you find a new ancestor, you now have the challenge of identifying that person's parents.
Even if you're researching the descendants of someone, you might find all of them, but have you found every record you can for each person?

But for me, the biggest thing to think about
is how writing can improve our research.

Genealogy software is great for recording the facts that we have found and the conclusions that we reached but isn't always the best for showing how we reached that conclusion. That's where writing comes in.

There is something about writing that makes us organize our thoughts and spot problems with our research. If you're like me and have a hard time remembering what you had for breakfast this morning, you might forget why you came to the conclusion you did.

To be clear, I'm not talking about writing the definitive book about one of your ancestral lines.
You could write an article for a genealogical or historical society. You could write a blog post or even a post for social media. You could also write something for your own files.

Don't let perfectionism keep you from writing. Your research will thank you. ■
